Catherine Ladnier

When Catherine Ladnier is asked what sparked her interest in environmental issues, she grasps for an answer. "There was no camping, no hiking in the East L.A. neighborhood where I grew up" she muses. "In fact, as a Girl Scout leader I had to go camping once, and I came home sick," she laughs.

But somewhere between her childhood and today, Ladnier has embraced a responsibility to preserve our natural surroundings. "I believe that all of life is interconnected. Whether you are a hiker, camper or just like to take walks." Acting on that premise, Ladnier donated 38-acres of her maternal grandfather's Easley, South Carolina land to what will be dedicated this year as the Nalley Brown Nature Park. Open to the public, the Park's emphasis will be on providing education to school children.

A graduate of Mills College and Harvard University, Ladnier is an active member of the National Trust for Historic Preservation, and works with Upstate Forever, a land trust in the Greenville-Spartanburg area. Ladnier and her husband J.M. Robinson have supported National Wildlife Foundation generously through the Vazomica Foundation, and both serve on the President's Advisory Council.
